Reported Anglo-French Intervention in Nicaragua.

IMPORTANT FROM CHINA.

[illegible] at a Decline—Cotton [illegible]

[illegible] Steamship Persia, C. H. H. Judkins, Esq., Commander, from Liverpool, on the 27th [illegible], at noon, entered on this port yesterday morning.

The steamship City of Washington, whose news was telegraphed from Newfoundland, also arrived in the port of New-York yesterday morning, having experienced on her passage moderate weather generally prevailing. She left Liverpool on the 28th of November.

The Cunard Company advertise the screw-steamer Arabia to sail from Liverpool for New-York on the 8th December, the same day that the Arabia sails for Boston. The Kangaroo is to be employed in the opposite trade to that between New-York and Boston.

The Persia's City Article of the 28th says: "Serious apprehensions are entertained for the safety of the Liverpool and Indian Empire, which left New-York for this port a month ago. The rate of 25 guineas per cent, had been paid for insurance, the regular charge being from 10 to 15 guineas only. The Indian Empire is the last of the overdue American steamers, the Edinburg having arrived on Tuesday afternoon." On referring to Lloyd's list the Times would have found that the Indian Empire left Halifax Oct. 21.

Mr. Lloyd announces that the steamship Indian Empire has not, as it was reported, been at sea one week. By the latest advices she was at Halifax undergoing repairs, caused by a big heaving run foul, of her.

The Times of the 29th says:

The rate of insurance on the Indian Empire, which left New-York on the 23d of October, has advanced to 15 and 20 per cent., and even at these extreme charges transactions cannot be effected to any extent."

It is mentioned that the Galway (Lever) Transatlantic Company have concluded a contract with Thomas Earle & Co., ship-builders, Newcastle-on-Tyne, for the construction of three first-class side-wheel steamers, to be ready for sea respectively in April, July and August next. The steamers are to be of large capacity, and it is said that a guarantee has been given that they shall be equal to the performance of any vessel afloat per hour, minimum speed, with a consumption of only 70 tons of coal per day.

MOUNTERRAT 23, 1858.

DEAR: I have to apologize for the delay which, in consequence of my absence from England, has occurred in acknowledging your letter of the 6th inst., forwarding a prospectus of the Company established for the conveyance of European mails and passengers, and Galway, to British America and the United States. There my attention was directed to this important subject, several years ago. I have always been of opinion that the advantages of the geographical position of Galway, would not be fully recognized until it had been demonstrated that the passage by that route to America could be more quickly performed than by any other. I heartily wish success to the Company, by whom that fact has now been satisfactorily established, at the same time, to congratulate you upon your connection with an undertaking which promises, in many ways, to be beneficial to Ireland.

I am, &c., CLARENDON.

The London Morning Post (Anti-Ministerial) gives prominence to the following:

We believe we are correct in announcing the recall of Lord Napier from the mission at Washington. The assigned cause is his lordship's tendency to Republican doctrine.

Mr. Lever, it is understood, will be promoted from Trieste to represent England in the United States.

In connection, the LONDON Globe, of the 23d ult., says: "Lord Napier is about to be removed from Washington to represent Her Majesty at a European Court, but the change is one in the regular course of diplomatic promotion, and arises from no dissatisfaction on the part of the Government with his conduct of affairs in the United States. We have no claim to represent the views of Her Majesty's present advisers, but in this instance we have excellent reasons to know that Government, so far from censuring Lord Napier, consider that the zeal and ability he has always shown in the performance of his public duties entitle him to their best consideration." The Globe adds that it believes the assertion that Mr. Lyons, now at Florence, will succeed Lord Napier has good foundation.

On the 24th of November, the schooner Annie Grant, of Belcombe, Hayes, master, put into Kinsale with the mate and 13 men of the crew steamer Cuba, of Waterford, whom they picked up in a boat about 80 miles N. W. of Seilly Island. The steamer, it appears, had foundered about 30 miles from that place, and the mate reported that the captain and 15 other men had got into another boat, but the account has been received yet as to whether they succeeded in reaching land or not. The Cuba was a fine new vessel, built by the Messrs. MACCORMICK, of Wexford. She was intended for the Baltic trade, and was, consequently, flat-bottomed, to suit the shallow water in the Baltic ports, but having been finished late in the Summer for the Baltic, she was sent to Liverpool for coals, and was lost on her voyage.

Information has been brought by some whalers, recently arrived, that Captain McCLINTOCK, Commander of Lady Franklin's Arctic Expedition, was seen early in August within Peel's Bay, into which he had succeeded in navigating the Fox, and that he was holding communication with numerous parties of Esquimaux. In regard to the Atlantic Cable, the Trieste Osservatore has the subjoined communication from Valentia, it bears date the 21st of November:

"Nothing of importance occurred since my last until Friday, when the weather was so fine that no further protect could be advanced for not proceeding with the laying-down of the shore end of the cable. The vessel accordingly proceeded to sea, and succeeded in submerging the few miles of shore cable, and in making a splice with the deep sea portion about five miles off Doulus Head. This operation was easily performed, and it is much to be regretted that the remaining seven miles of shore cable left at Queenstown was not brought here and added to the part now laid down. Had this been done there is no doubt but the result would be satisfactory. This is more evident from the fact that, after making the splice, when the shore end was lowered, some of the men, in their anxiety to continue the submerging of the small cable, discovered a "fault" having the conducting wire exposed to the extent of the insulating power of the latter. The defective part was immediately cut out. But the submerging was discontinued, though it is probable that other defects of the kind would have been discovered had they proceeded. They cannot be blamed for giving the present result a fair trial. It is not aware that the shore ends had been tested when it was laid down, nor is there any person of sufficient experience here to do so, and when we recollect that some of the most eminent practical electricians of the day have differed materially in the manner and result of their testing the Atlantic Cable, it is little to expect on the subject of shore ends for the terrestrial conductor. Neither do I, therefore, know of the present condition of the cable, nor whether the latter discovery of the question of shore end has materially improved its condition, as the cable has been short to since the 1st instant, and the end, with one exception, discharged, (not removed to Queenstown as has been asserted.)"

In Paris it is asserted that an Anglo-French fleet will leave on the 15th December for the Gulf of Mexico, and that the French fleet will have on board a battery of artillery in order to oppose any enterprise of the filibusters against Central America. In commenting upon the account of Lord Napier from Washington, in the columns of the Morning Post, which heading the article, the Globe says: "We have authority for affirming that the statement of our contemporary is incorrect. Lord Napier is not to be succeeded at Washington by a minister to represent her Majesty at a European Court, but the change is one in the regular course of diplomatic promotion, and arises from no dissatisfaction on the part of the Government with his conduct of affairs in the United States. We have no claim to represent the views of Her Majesty's present advisers, but in this instance we have excellent reasons to know that Government, so far from censuring Lord Napier, consider that the zeal and ability he has always shown in the performance of his public duties entitle him to their best consideration." The Globe adds that it believes the assertion that Mr. Lyons, now at Florence, will succeed Lord Napier has good foundation.

The Paris correspondent of the Morning Post says that he has most interesting dispatches on the mission of Sir W. G. OUSELEY, Her Britannic Majesty's Envoy, now at Nicaragua, and adds: The Governments of England and France have agreed to support the independence of that republic, and, in the spirit of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty, countenance the project for cutting the Isthmus of Panama by a French or any other company which may be accepted by the Nicaragua and Costa Rica States. There is every reason to fear Mr. BUCHANAN backs the Monroe doctrine of considering Washington the centre from which all authority ought to radiate and prevail throughout the whole continent of America. The Government of America will, it is supposed, insist on the Isthmus of Panama being cut by an American Company, and on America being the paternal guardian of the passage which is to unite the two oceans. England and France, bound by treaty to support the independence of Central America, and pledged to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, will perhaps be called upon to support their engagements. What has been the conduct of Lord NAPIER, her Majesty's Ambassador, in this affair? I do not understand from the dispatches that I have seen, that his lordship has supported Sir W. G. OUSELEY; if not, he has committed a grave error, as the maintaining our engagements with the Governments of Central America is necessary if we are not prepared to give up all British possessions on that continent."

A telegram from Paris says: "It is reported that an Anglo-French fleet will leave on the 19th of December for the Gulf of Mexico. The French fleet will have on board a battery of artillery, in order to oppose any enterprise of the filibusters against Central America."

The Morning Post is informed that a small English fleet is to be stationed at Panama.

In reference to the Central American question, the Morning Herald states that the utmost harmony prevails between France, England, and the United States, and that they have all one object in view, namely, to obtain the best means of transit across the Isthmus as speedily as possible.

The contract for the expected Chilian loan of £1,200,000 was signed on the 24th by the Chilian Commissioner and Baring Brothers. The loan will be brought in at 4½ per cent. stock, but the price has not transpired. The money is to be applied to railway purposes.

Mr. W. E. GLADSTONE reached Vienna on the 18th, and left for Trieste on the 20th, where her Majesty's ship Terrible was waiting to convey him to Corfu on the 25th. He had an interview with the Austrian Minister for Foreign Affairs.

A New-York correspondent quoted by the London Globe refers to the important letter in regard to an English settlement on the Amazon, recently published in the New-York Times, and adds: "This statement has so much foundation that the Government of Ecuador recently ceded to its British creditors certain tracts of land on the Amazon and Napo, over which Her Majesty, supposing the land to be absolutely yielded to British subjects, has of course sovereign rights; but it is not quite true that a new British colony has been erected in the dark, nor that one is likely to be founded on the Upper Amazon just yet. Authentic documents relating to this subject have recently come into my possession, but their voluminous character prevents a resumé of their contents being sent before the next steamer.

The Globe, copying an article from the New-York Times on the state of shipping, observes: "If British ship-owners turned their attention to what is taking place in Canada they would prepare to carry the vast trade of the Western States from Quebec, in conjunction with the Grand Trunk Railway system, which is destined to restore to Canada the trade of the West, diverted by the Erie Canal and the superior model of the American packet ships. With two such fine commodious harbors as Quebec and Portland, they have a glorious opportunity of securing a valuable carrying trade hitherto monopolized by the New-York shipowners."

The London Times, in response to the defence by the American Press of Mr. Commissioner RUSH, reiterates its charges against that gentleman, and says that "a comparison of the English Treaty, which obtains nothing," is all that is necessary to prove its assertion.

The same journal has a satirical article on the proposition, alleged to be in contemplation at Washington, to place a tax on tea, drawing attention to the manner in which a like proposition was treated at Boston, in 1773. It says: "An American self-imposed tea tax certainly teaches one lesson, and that is that it is not bad government, so much as a meddling, domineering government, that alienates the members of a free State."

The British Board of Trade returns for the month of October show a falling off of £716,092 in the value of the exports, as compared with the same month last year. The shipments of Cotton manufactures, however, exhibit a large increase.

WM. LEGGE OSWEN, the London stock broker who was found guilty of forgery, and applying to his own use securities and property entrusted to his care, had been sentenced to twenty years' penal servitude.

Admiral Lord LYONS died at Arundel Castle on the 24th of November, after a short illness. He had just completed his 66th year. His last service was the command of the squadron which accompanied Queen VICTORIA to Cherbourg. The London Times, in its obituary notice, characterizes Lord Lyons as the most illustrious Admiral in the British Navy, and says he nobly earned his peerage by his services in the Black Sea and the Crimea. Lord Lyons is succeeded in the title by Mr. LYONS, British Minister at Florence, and who is spoken of for the Mission to Washington.

The task of completing the Great Eastern steamship was about to commence, and it is considered certain that she will be ready to make her first trip to Portland by Midsummer next. The first year's trips of the vessel are to be between England and Portland, but where she will be eventually employed is at present undecided. A suggestion that she should be the pioneer of a Great Trunk line of communication between England and India was favorably received.

The Canadian News has undoubted authority for saying that, although Her Majesty finds it impossible for her and the Prince Consort to pay a visit to Canada, a short interval only will elapse before one of the young Princes will go there.

Intelligence had reached Lloyd's within the space of two or three days of the loss of no fewer than eight Quebec homeward-bound ships, including the ships Peerless, Barbers and Rankin; barks Lady Campbell, Patrel and Glenda; and the brig Wilkinson. Except in the case of the Glenda, there was little or no loss of life.

The trial of Count DE MONTALEMBERT and M. DOMMAN, editor of the Correspondent, charged with having published a seditious libel, entitled "A Debate on India in the British Parliament," commenced at noon on the 24th November before the Sixth Chamber of Correctional Police, presided over by M. BENEDETTI. The speeches of M. M. BENEDETTI and DUFAURE, on behalf of the accused, are said to have been magnificent beyond description. The former spoke for two hours and a half, and said that the prosecution was "unjust, unfounded, ill-advised, and, he would add, rash." When BENEDETTI concluded a tumultuous shout of "bravo" burst from the lower end of the court. The President ordered the police to turn out any one they could find who had cried out, but they could not put their finger upon any one. At 6 o'clock in the evening the Judges retired to deliberate, and at 7 o'clock they returned into Court and pronounced judgment to the following effect: DOMMAN to be imprisoned for six months and to pay a fine of 3,000f.; DONNET, to be imprisoned one month and to pay a fine of 1,000f. Both defendants to be jointly and severally held liable for the fines, and the costs of the trial, and in default of payment to be imprisoned for one year. It is stated that MONTALEMBERT will appeal against the verdict.

Among the distinguished persons present were Mr. O'DELL BRACE, the Duke de BROGLIE, and seven or eight members of the corps diplomatic.

The result of the trial had excited much bitter articles from the Press of England, and caused a slight depression in the funds, both in London and Paris.

The Paris correspondent of the Globe, writing on Thursday evening, says: "A fresh number of Le Correspondant is about to issue, with another article from the pen of MONTALEMBERT; and the periodical is likely to become the most widely-diffused organ of publicity in the French Empire and in Europe. The topic so lected by the eloquent writer is apparently non-political, being about 'The Monks of the Western Church,' but it can be a powerful weapon. The Ex-Minister COUSIN DE PARTOUX, is about adding to this issue an other article, which will probably bring down a prosecution on him also.

It is said that Prince WIZNIZOW, desiring to devote himself exclusively to the government of Algeria, is about to resign the administration of the Colonies into the hands of the Minister of Marine.

The Jewish Consistory had resolved on prosecuting M. VEUILLOT, of the Univers, for having accused the Jews of cannibalism, occasionally kidnapping or poisoning an little children.

Emperor NAPOLEON is said to have declared that a war with Austria is not an impossible contingency. The Press at Paris probably believed the rumor, for it had, on the 22d, an article of extreme violence, in which, transferring its rancor from England to Austria, it earnestly hopes to see the latter country ravaged by war. The Patrie, on the same evening, also had a violent article against Austria.

The Paris correspondent of the Times states that the Paris newspapers were, on Monday, the 22d, officially prohibited from discussing not only the Mortara case, but any question whatever that has reference to religion. The Univers, which contains little else than religious discussion, is prohibited like the rest.

The French Emperor has pardoned GOUBS, ORSINI's servant, altogether, and he is to be set at large on the Sardinian frontier.

The Patrie reiterates the story that the Emperor of Russia will probably visit Paris in the Spring.

The Bourse was feeble on the 26th, but the 3 p Cents. were not lower. They closed at 74.15 for money and 74.25 for account.

The French frigate Theophile has been lost near Cadiz. Eight persons were drowned.

The order forwarded to the Spanish squadron in the West Indies to proceed to Vera Cruz, has been followed by another, directing the forces which for some time have been collected at Cadiz, under pretence of an expedition against the Riff pirates, to start at once for Cuba.

A letter from a semi-official source asserts that the Government of the United States has written to its Minister at Madrid to say that, though it is not disposed to allow any European Government to establish a permanent influence in or a protectorate over any American State, it will not oppose Spain obtaining from Mexico the reparation which she thinks due.

Señor ROS OLANO has been appointed Captain-General of Cuba. General CONCHA will, however, remain in Havana until the difficulties with Mexico are arranged.

Late advices report that much damage had been done to the shipping in the Mediterranean during the late severe weather—particularly to foreign vessels. No details are given.

The Spanish Government has ordered the shores of the Mediterranean to be surveyed by a commission of engineers, in order to determine upon the most convenient spot for the submarine cable, which is to place Spain in communication with the Canary Islands.

The Company for undertaking the cutting of a canal across the territory of Nicaragua, to unite the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, has offered the presidency of its Board of Directors to M. ALEXANDER DE HUMBOLDT.

Following the example of Havre, the Bordeaux Chamber of Commerce, instigated by the situation of French commerce with Mexico, has applied to the Minister of Foreign Affairs and Commerce, requesting the intervention of the French Government in the matter. Documents, showing the exactions to which French merchants have been subjected, have been transmitted to their Excellencies.

The King of Denmark announces that he has made his last concession to German claims, and that if any further demands are made he will stand on his own rights, appealing to the patriotism of his people and the friendship of his allies. This intention is made known in a circular of Nov. 8, addressed by the Danish Minister of Foreign Affairs to the Danish Ministers in London, Paris, St. Petersburg and Stockholm.

The Bank of Frankfort had reduced its rate of discount from 5 to 4 per cent.

The Prussian elections had resulted in the complete triumph of the Constitutional party. The new Ministry is supported by three-fourths of the Deputies whose return is as yet known.

The Paris correspondent of the Manchester Guardian writes:

"I have with my own eyes seen a curious letter, nothing less than a letter from Cardinal ANTONELLI to a private friend of his here, who had written to him on the Mortara business. The Cardinal expresses himself on the matter as follows: 'I hope you do my common sense the honor to believe that I judge the Mortara affair as you do—an unmistakable blunder; but, my dear friend, I am no longer able to stem the torrent—I am borne down and carried away, (Je suis entierement debordé.) You cannot imagine what our ultras are here!' I will not answer for Cardinal ANTONELLI's sincerity; but, as I can answer for his very sharp sense, I believe there may be truth in what he says."

The Civilta Cattolica, of Rome, discusses the Mortara affair, concluding that "common sense, and a certain amount of supernatural faith, are all that are required for any one to affirm that the child should not be given up to his parents."

The King of Naples is said to have decided that all foreigners employed in his States must cause themselves to be naturalized.

The approaching arrival of Mr. GLADSTONE at Corfu, had created much excitement at Athens in diplomatic circles.

The Journal de Constantinople announces that 12,000 Ottoman troops have been dispatched into Arabia.

In addition to the Chinese news received by the City of Washington at Halifax, we learn that the Commissioners from the Imperial Government had just arrived at Shanghae to arrange the tariff, &c.

At Canton business was still suspended, but the political symptoms had become more peaceful. The exports of tea to date were 7,000,000 pounds, showing a deficiency, compared with last year, of 12,000,000 pounds. Of silk they were 20,000 bales, showing a deficiency of 12,000 bales. The stock of tea at Canton was 200 to 300 chops of inferior quality.

According to the intelligence from Swatow, a hurricane had been experienced at that port, during which the following British vessels were wrecked or went on shore, viz.: The Anonyme, Glendower, Hong Kong, Hepscott, Kenaldie, Louisa Hallie, Louisa, Moulton, Alfred the Great, Beverley, Dennis Hill, Harvest Home, and the William Frederick. The North Star was also lost on the Patras Shoal. In addition to the fourteen British ships wrecked or driven ashore during the hurricane at Swatow, there were seven foreign ships also wrecked or stranded. The Times says that as the above vessels are said to be in ballast or with cargoes of rice, the destruction of property is estimated at a little more than £100,000, of which about £15,000 or £20,000 will fall upon Lloyds. The Morning Herald says: "The names of the vessels wrecked on the coast of China, issued at Lloyds, are the Moulton, the North Star, the Harvest Home, and the Kinaldi."

The Very Latest.

FRIDAY EVENING.

Consols have sustained a fresh decline of ¼th ⅌ cent., although money is extraordinarily abundant, and the unemployed resources of the Bank of England are rapidly increasing. Business was languid. The other departments of Stock Exchange also exhibited an inanimate appearance, but English Railway Stocks were firmer. The New Chilean Loan has been received with a considerable degree of favor and was quoted ⅝@¾ ⅌ cent. premium. In the market to-day a good demand was experienced. In exceptional cases transactions took place at 2½.

There were no bullion operations at the Bank today.

The English Funds opened this morning at a fractional improvement, but were heavy during the rest of the day. After regular hours there was rather less weakness.

In the Foreign Exchanges this afternoon there was no change of importance from the rates of last post.

In the Colonial Produce Markets during the week transactions have been materially curtailed by the very limited supplies brought forward. The general tone of the market remains nominally the same as of the preceding week, the prices of most of the leading articles having slightly improved. The demand however, as usual at this season, is without animation.

The eminent Glasgow, Liverpool and London firm of Messrs. DENNISTOUN & Co., yesterday issued a circular announcing that on the 30th they will be prepared to complete the entire liquidation of their debts, which, when they called their creditors together, a year since yesterday, amounted to £3,142,000.

The two installments anticipated by the above-mentioned circular were not due till Dec. 31 and Jan. 30, next; the confidence expressed in the firm at the time of their difficulties has thus been fully justified. It is stated in the Times city article, that their ultimate losses will prove much smaller than could have been originally hoped under the most sanguine calculations.

The Morning Herald, in an article which assumes to be semi-official, asserts that Sir John YOUNG's project not only has never received the sanction of the Government, but it is diametrically opposed to their views with regard to the Ionian Islands. The annexation or distribution of the Islands, in protection of Great Britain, Greece, or any other State, would be a consideration beyond the competency of any Government or Governments to decide. Such a question could be settled only by a Congress of Government Powers. The Government of Great Britain have no intention of proposing any change necessitating such an appeal.

MR. MORPHY IN PARIS.

From Our Paris Correspondent.

PARIS, Sunday, Nov. 21, 1858.

* * * I ought to say a word, to-day, in conclusion, in regard to the movements of our great chess champion, Mr. MORPHY. Mr. M. is not going home so soon as announced in the New-York journals. He will spend the Winter in Paris. Professor ANDERSSEN, of Breslau, will arrive here from the 20th to the 24th of December, and then the great match between him and MORPHY will take place. Nothing has been heard from M. HERLDEBRANDT, and at present Mr. MORPHY has no other great match in anticipation but that with the distinguished Prussian Professor. As both the gentlemen in this case are "unprofessional players," they will not stake any money; but their friends will no doubt bet largely. M. HARRWITZ feels sore over his defeat, and to all the attempts of Mr. MORPHY's friends to induce him to try another match he offers the excuse that Mr. MORPHY has not treated him well. But this excuse is totally unfounded, and is based upon a letter written by Mr. M. to the editor of the Monde Illustré, (in which HARRWITZ edits the chess corner,) correcting some of the statements of HARRWITZ in regard to their great match. MORPHY says that HARRWITZ has more points of excellence in his game than any man he has ever met, and he would only be too well pleased to meet him again. He does not expect to meet in M. ANDERSSEN as difficult an adversary as M. HARRWITZ, but this remains to be proved. M. ANDERSSEN, it is said, is "playing up," and intends making a tremendous rush on the American boy. But if his friends wish they can have millions of money staked, with odds in his favor. Mr. STAUNTON, by his last letter, and by his garbled publication of Mr. MORPHY's letter, has lost every friend he had here, and I learn nearly all his friends in England as well. His course has been neither gentlemanly nor honorable, and among the many friends Mr. MORPHY has made in France, not one would now consent to see him play with STAUNTON on any terms. In the meantime MORPHY continues to play nearly every day at the Café de la Regence, against all comers, giving odds to the weak, and showing his brilliant points to the strong. Among those he has lately beaten in even matches were M. LUBINSKI, a celebrated Polish player, who came to Paris expressly, and who got beaten seven straight games; M. LAROCHE, whom Mr. MORPHY declares the best French player, and whom he beat with ease; and M. DE RIVIERE, a player who takes rank next to, if not equal with, M. LAROCHE, and who, in his various contests with Mr. MORPHY, has occasionally beaten him. This M. DE RIVIERE is a brother of your Captain DE RIVIERE, of Blount notoriety. He is a gentlemanly, handsome man, a reporter for the Press, a brilliant chess-player, as we have seen, and, like the Captain, speaks English, their mother having been a Scotch woman. I ought to mention that MORPHY has also beaten, with ease, and with great mortification to his adversary, a Frenchman by the name of EXRA, who came and challenged him, backed by a numerous array of friends, with something of the air of mockery with which Goliah defied David. It did not take MORPHY long to reduce his bombast to the smallest possible dimensions.

MALAKOFF.

The English Embassy at Washington—Lord Lyons.

LONDON, Friday, Nov. 26, 1858.

Lord NAPIER will, I believe, go to Berlin as Minister Plenipotentiary; and his presence there will probably have a useful influence in sustaining the Constitutional party. It is supposed that Lord LYONS, whose father died this week at Arundel Castle, the residence of his daughter, the Duchess of Norfolk, will be sent as British Minister to Washington. He has for some months filled the minor post of Plenipotentiary to the Grand Ducal Court of Tuscany. He had little opportunity there of acquiring distinction or experience; but he is, I am told, favorably spoken of by those who have had the best opportunities of estimating his character and disposition. Some years after the marriage of his sister to the Duke of Norfolk, (then Lord FITZ ALLAN,) the lady changed her religion and became a Roman Catholic. An amusing anecdote was mentioned to me some time ago of the domestic changes which ensued thereupon. It had been agreed previously, as is commonly done in such cases, that the children, if boys, should be brought up in the religion of their father, and if girls, in that of their mother. When old enough to be taken to places of Divine worship, it of course became necessary to explain the rule to the inmates of the nursery. After the change of opinions above alluded to, the eldest little girl was told one day that she must be dressed to go with mamma to mass. "No, no," she said stoutly; "all young gentlemen go to chapel, but all young ladies go to Church;" and it was not without a good deal of tender importunity that the youthful Protestant's objections could be overcome. It was in behalf of the second son of this marriage that the great law suit was begun two years ago, and is still carrying on, for the vast territorial inheritance of the Earls of Shrewsbury. Lord TALBOT was declared last session by the House of Peers to have made good his title to the Earldom, which is the oldest of that rank in England. The succession to the estates, however, can only be decided by the judgment of a Court of Law and it stands for hearing in the Common Pleas during the present sittings after term. Forty thousand a year is the prize contended for; and a good deal of religious feeling is mixed up with the controversy.

Interesting Account of the Trial of Montalembert.

From the Manchester Guardian.

PARIS, Thursday, Nov. 25, 1858.

Yesterday morning, between 9 and 10 o'clock, I was one of a small group of men who clustered round the doors of the entrance of the Palace of Justice in order to be present at the trial of M. DE MONTALEMBERT. At 11 o'clock we were admitted, and a few minutes after 12 o'clock the proceedings of the Court began. The chamber is extremely small, holds about 150 people easily, and about 200 closely packed. I should think we were, altogether, over 200, counted only ten ladies in the trial-chamber, including Madame DE MONTALEMBERT and her young unmarried daughter.

The first proceeding of any interest was the interrogatory of the accused persons, and, I may say, of the principal one of the two; for the few words addressed to the editor of the Correspondant were of small consequence. M. DE MONTALEMBERT was seated by the side of M. DUFAURE, and close to him was the Due DE BROGLIE, who had requested that position, and OSCAR BARROT—the extremes, about, of moderate parliamentarism in France. Of course your limits will not admit of my detailing for you minutely this most anxious sitting, which lasted from 12 o'clock to a 3¼ in the evening. All I can attempt must, of course, be to reproduce the principal features of the audience, and its general aspect. You can conceive nothing more admirable than the attitude of M. DE MONTALEMBERT during his interrogatory. It was such calmness and calmness itself, with that touch of irony that is so peculiar to him, and with a studied politeness to the Bench that evidently put his questioners into the most insupportable embarrassment. Those who remember him at the Chamber of Peers, found him whole and entire yesterday of the Police Correctionnelle. In these cases, two things are to be avoided: the wish to excite a penalty, which exposes one's weakness, and shows you humble before the judges the man who has been bold, pen in hand; and the wish for popularity, which revels a martyr into a weak-kneed suppliant, and makes the man an inevitably theatrical hero. In nine cases out of ten you have the latter. M. DE MONTALEMBERT, I need scarcely say, was neither the one nor the other. He with quiet determination held to all he had said, but did so without the slightest "rap"—did so just as an English gentleman would have done. In answer to one question put, he distinctly said: "Yes, I do esteem the political institutions of England preferable to those by which France is at present ruled;" and on another occasion he replied: "I did, and do, mean to say that I had more the freedom England enjoys, and regret that France no longer enjoys it also." At this he was stopped by the President, and told he was repeating the offence for which he was then being tried. He bowed, and said, "I cannot state facts other than as they are." Moderately and resolutely, with the moderation that belongs to true resolution only, he assumed the entire responsibility of the incriminated act on himself, and said, "I will take it exclusively if you desire it."

This interrogatory was followed by the speech of the Procureur Impérial, than which it came out in place piece of oratory it has never been my fortune to hear. Of course he took the side of the argument one was certain he would take; and, after having stormed about deplorably for some time, seeming to derive unutterable consolation from the circumstance that two hundred years ago England had not a free press, he gave vent to what he thought was the climax of his rhetoric, by shooting out to the echoes of the tribunal and to his admiring compeers, that M. DE MONTALEMBERT was "not a Frenchman;" that he was not "a patriot!" &c. "You have cast France down at England's feet," he exclaimed, in the finest frenzy possible, "and there, there—you have struck her in the face! Your work is an impious one!"

Now, I need hardly say that the magnificence of language did not produce the effect that was anticipated; upon the whole, the accusation was a failure. Above all, too, its weakness was shown by the very circumstance that, instead of following it out in a clear, concise, business-like manner, emotion only was sought to be produced by the clap-trap denunciation of M. DE MONTALEMBERT as a man of "unpatriotic" mind. This, however, furnished BEAUPRÉ with one of his happiest rejoinders: After the opening of his "plaidoirie," he turned round upon the unlucky Procureur Impérial, in what I can only call the effulgence of his talent, and with that ringing voice, which no one forgets who has once heard it: "It is impossible," he cried, "that M. DE MONTALEMBERT may have overlooked what passed in England two hundred years ago, absorbed that he is in regret for what was lost to France, and ten years since!" This told, notwithstanding all the efforts made to repress every sign of sympathy. But here I stop. I must renounce the idea of entering into any analysis of BEAUPRÉ's speech, and I must do so at once and resolutely, or I shall be dragged beyond what your limits can allow. Let me, then, speak summarily of this most glorious oratorical display. For the last twelve years I have heard, I think, every orator in France every time he has spoken, and BEAUPRÉ, of course, with the rest. This, as you perceive, comprises two years of Louis PHILIPPE's reign, and the three ending in 1851. I never heard the great royalist speaker make anything like so splendid an harangue as that of yesterday. For two hours and a quarter BEAUPRÉ poured forth such a lava flood of eloquence as scorched whatever it touched, leaving no object it came in contact with otherwise than blackened by its contact. All the indignation and the wrath, all the stifled energy, all the contempt for the corrupt flatterers and base agents of despotism that has for six years been garnered up in the hearts of all the men who in France loved liberty, had enjoyed it, honored it, and now mourn for its loss, all this burst its bounds yesterday, and with its strength and truth, and deep, painfully deep, conviction, irresistibly bore down every hindrance, every attempt at resistance. It was the cry of the small group of honest men and noble spirits yet left in this country that would make, that did make itself heard, and with what awful energy they best can tell, I imagine, who were the objects of the attack. It was the voice of dumb France, given back to her for an hour, given back without a possible echo, but revelling, as it were, in its own sound, so soon again to be hushed. Picture to yourself all that every lover of freedom, every asserter of human dignity, every believer in human progress has since 1851, said, in the countless whose expression is yet unfettered—imagine the scorn of all the clean-handed men in Europe for the tribe of those hangers-on of empire whom we wot of so well—those "sycophants and beggars," (I quote BEAUPRÉ's own words,) "who under every government flatter, and lie, and wheedle, and hold out their craving palms!"—imagine all this condensed, and poured forth in one flood, and you will then have but an imperfect notion of what was BEAUPRÉ's speech of yesterday; add to this, too, his matchless voice, as I said before, and the unerring aim of his gestures, which seem to point the arrows of his speech, guiding them just where they may mortally wound. Well might he say, in beginning his defence, that the trial was an "ill-advised and dangerous undertaking" (for the Government, namely.) The Emperor's usual moderation and good judgment has failed him in all this, and in this, which may be called his first duel with the expression of public opinion in France, and in the civilized world, he has come off ingloriously; he has been beaten. It matters little that MONTALEMBERT should be condemned to six months' prison by a servile court of Magistrates—(whom BEAUPRÉ warned to take care of what their servility exposed them to)—the real victory obtained is that achieved by truth and public opinion over despotism. MONTALEMBERT may be the apparent victim of his noble efforts for the honor, for the liberties of France, but the poisoned shaft is buried in the side of Imperial institutions as they now exist, rely upon this; and on this point I can refer you to nothing truer than your own app ications in your leading article of two days ago.

But to bring my narrative to a close. The reply of the Procureur Impériale to BEAUPRÉ's speech was weaker than his first accusatory harangue even had been. How could it be otherwise? What had he to say? Nothing, save the vulgar attempt again to stir up the vulgar antipathy to us, and represent MONTALEMBERT as "unpatriotic."

This feeble bit of oratory was followed by DUFAURE's defence of the editor of the Correspondant, which completed his colleague's triumph in a way, inasmuch as it was admirable from qualities just opposite to those displayed by BEAUPRÉ. Eloquence harder, bitterer, more practical or more to the point, cannot be conceived. No enthusiasm, no attempt to carry any one away, but just a statement of facts impossible to escape from, not a leg left for the accusation to stand upon, and yet—this was the murmur everywhere when the Court retired to prepare the sentence)—and yet they must condemn, for it is enjoined upon them to do so.

When the Judges came back, after a deliberation of one hour and a half, you clearly saw that they felt the falseness of their position. A large body of Sergents de Ville were marshalled into the Court, and the following enormity uttered by the presiding Judge: "We had counted on the reserve of the public—we have been mistaken; instead of one Sergent de Ville, we have sent for several. Their duty is to watch every individual present; and, if any one makes the slightest sign, to arrest him and bring him before the tribunal." Thereupon, addressing the policemen: "Now," said the Judge, "place yourselves so as that no one shall escape you, and be vigilant." These men placed themselves back to back so as to command both sides of the Hall, and set to "watch" whilst the sentence was read which condemns MONTALEMBERT to six months' imprisonment and 3,000f. fine. To this I will add nothing. The crowd went away in forced and breathless silence; but do you think, at the bottom of that silence, lies anything auspicious for the existing régime, as it is actually constituted?

Bloody Affray in Grand-street—Three Men Stabbed with a Sword—The Perpetrator of the Deed Arrested.

About 11 o'clock last evening a sanguinary conflict took place at a low place, called the "Arcade Saloon," No. 127 Grand-street, said to be kept by an individual named CUNNEY; and during the affray CHAS. E. BEAUPRÉ and two other men, whose names are unknown, were cut in a most barbarous manner around the face and head with a sword in the hands of an infuriated individual named TERRY TOOLEY, a young man employed as a dancer in the establishment. The origin of the difficulty was in regard to getting seats. At the time the fight commenced there were present nearly 100 persons, mostly regular patrons of the establishment, and many of them under the influence of the vile liquors retailed at the den. In addition to the stabbing, there was a free fight with fists, and the seats, chairs, tables, seats, decanters, and all the moveable stock of the saloon, were used as missiles by the infuriated crowd. The police were promptly on hand, and, after a free use of the locust, succeeded in quelling the disturbance. TOOLEY effected his escape, by running into another den called the Grand-street House, kept by JAMES MULLIGAN, who, the public say, did all he could to try to effect the escape of TOOLEY, and baffle them. A strict watch was immediately set on the place, and, after the lapse of half an hour, TOOLEY came out into the street bareheaded, down Grand-street to Broadway, and was pursued by the Fourteenth Ward Police, and captured on the corner of Broadway and Canal-street, and taken to the Fourteenth Ward Police station and locked up. While the officers were in the Grand-street House searching for TOOLEY, a low chap named JAMES MCDONALD proposed to MINARDAN to eject the officers; he was arrested and also locked up at the Station-house. CHAUNCY E. BEAUPRÉ, one of the wounded men had his skull fractured, and will not survive. After he was stabbed he was taken to a drug store near the scene of the melée, but as his wounds were of a dangerous character he was removed to the New-York Hospital. At the last election he ran for Constable in the Ninth Ward on the Democratic ticket, nominated by the Shoulders. Great excitement prevailed in the Neighborhood, and as BEAUPRÉ belonged to the same party and Engine Company of which policeman ADAMS was a member, TOOLEY would have been lynched by the enraged crowd but for the strong police force. It is by some threatened to break into the Station-house and lynch TOOLEY. The other two wounded men were taken to the New-York Hospital by their friends, and are said to be badly injured, but it is supposed, not fatally.

Return of the Washington—Full Particulars of the Manner in which she was Visited by British Officers at San Juan—Correspondence between Flag-Officer Mackenzie and the Capitals of the Nicaraguan—Closing of the Nicaraguan

[illegible] Warrington, about the same time, which, by the [illegible] Commander, Lieutenant Commanding Pearson, [illegible] Warrington alone boarded her. They were not, however, repaid for their anxiety and [illegible] no filibusters were found, and none had [illegible] or heard of by those on board the Catherine.

[illegible] that all these remarkable [illegible] were transacted under the authority of the [illegible] Costa Rican, and very much [illegible] of the officers in command of H. B. [illegible] If the news here proves correct, he then [illegible] the Government is demanding an [illegible] of the British Government. This would [illegible] whether the British Government had [illegible] instructions upon the subject of the [illegible] visit in these waters, and [illegible] it is said, Sir W. G. O. was at present [illegible]. This Diplomatist requires watching closely; [illegible] it should not in future act with more circumspection, he will certainly bring matters here to a [illegible]. I think that they have now reached the [illegible] point.

I understand that a reply from Capt. ALEMAN to [illegible] officer McIlvrom's communication was sent on [illegible] the Resaca early on the morning of the 30th [illegible], and that Capt. ALEMAN therein claimed the [illegible] to visit our merchant vessels and institute an [illegible] into their character, upon the old and [illegible] grounds that the coast and harbors of the [illegible] kingdom were under the protection of [illegible] Britain. You are well aware that under the [illegible] treaty that pretension was thought [illegible] entirely exploded; yet it now appears that the [illegible] Government clings to its protectorate over the [illegible] coast, notwithstanding its treaty obligations [illegible] United States act to "assume" or "exercise [illegible]" over that or any other part of Central [illegible], which, of course, includes the Mosquito [illegible].

The afternoon of the same day (30th) Flag-officer [illegible] Saturday, Mr. Wadsworth, visited the Valorous, bearing the second communication for Capt. [illegible], and remained on board that vessel a considerable length of time. Mr. W. did not come on shore, [illegible] Valorous did not see him; but I learned from [illegible] that Mr. W. expressed himself [illegible] as being highly gratified with his interviews with Capt. ALEMAN and Sir WM. GORE OUSELEY; that [illegible] (Mr. W.) remarked, that he considered the recent [illegible] of boarding the Washington as now satisfactorily [illegible], so far as it could be, by Flag-officer McIlvrom; and he had no doubt there would be no difficulty [illegible] in future in that respect—the boarding and examination [illegible] of American merchant vessels by British cruisers [illegible] coast.

[illegible] as evidence of the kind feelings between our [illegible] and those of Her Britannic Majesty, I will [illegible] mention, that the same officer from whom I [illegible] the preceding information also told me that [illegible] before leaving the Savannah, Mr. B. sent his [illegible] to the Valorous for Capt. ALEMAN, whom [illegible] he had invited to accompany him on his [illegible] to Greytown, for the purpose of visiting Flag-officer [illegible], and, as I understand, to arrange, if possible, that a personal interview between the parties [illegible] in correspondence upon so grave an affair [illegible] would, in his opinion, [illegible] harmony, the kindest influences, and [illegible] Capt. ALEMAN [illegible] Mr. B. left on the Resaca—having accepted the invitation in the same frank manner in which it was extended; and Mr. DUVAL, Sir WM. GORE OUSELEY's Secretary, followed them out in another [illegible]. They both were most handsomely and cordially received on board the Resaca by Flag-officer McIlvrom, [illegible] Capt. GARNETT, [illegible] alone is calculated to [illegible] the most hardened sinner.—Capt. GARNETT [illegible] other officers of the ship, and were fascinated [illegible] on board the night. They both expressed themselves highly delighted with the attentions bestowed upon them, and grateful for the opportunity thereby [illegible].

Captain ALEMAN is a mild, gentlemanly and agreeable person, and highly esteemed. Mr. BURNS is a [illegible] man, and jovial good fellow. This was, indeed, a happy occasion of a very unpleasant occurrence [illegible] well calculated to wound and irritate the feelings of our naval officers; and these personal interviews and explanations, with good cheer and kind feelings predominating among the actors therein, [illegible] that to remove bad impressions and to [illegible] pleasant intercourse on both sides.

It will doubtless be regretted that Sir WILLIAM GORE OUSELEY's health—he has had quite an attack of fever [illegible] with the rough sea and unpleasant weather—has prevented a meeting between himself and Flag-officer McIlvrom, here; but, as I learn that the latter will leave in a day or two, with his family, [illegible] with him on board the Valorous,) in the English mail steamer for Aspinwall, they will, no doubt, have the pleasure of meeting there;—the [illegible] having unexpectedly left for that place on the morning of the 30th ult.; and she will probably [illegible] there until after the arrival of the mail steamer of the 5th December from New-York.

The Washington arrived here with 230 passengers for California. As there were no preparations completed for transporting them across the country to San Juan del Sur, Capt. CHILDS, the Agent of the Company, wisely concluded to send the Washington to Aspinwall, in the hope that the means had been provided by Mr. VANDERBILT, the President of the Company, to forward them from Aspinwall to Panama, and thence to San Francisco in accordance with Col. CHIMES' suggestion. Great, indeed, would have been the sufferings of these poor shipped passengers, had they reached San Juan del Sur on the Pacific side—and then only ascertained that the Hermann, which was to have called for them, and sailed direct for San Francisco from Panama, freighted so large a body of men from [illegible] the interior of Nicaragua, under such desperate circumstances, with disappointed hopes and excited [illegible]—most of them probably without the means of [illegible], unacquainted with the habits and language of the country, and desperate withal—[illegible] the difficulties which would have [illegible] to speak of the misery, disease and death [illegible] would have followed closely upon their foot[illegible]. A kind Providence has interposed for their salvation [illegible] the wile and which unprincipled men [illegible] them. The Washington left [illegible] on the afternoon of the 30th ultimo for Aspinwall; and if some arrangement has not been made by [illegible] under whose auspices she was sent out here, [illegible] her passengers forward to their destination from Panama, there being no means will be [illegible] to land them in New-York; for our Consul at Aspinwall will not permit them to be landed without the means of defraying their expenses.

A public meeting was held here on the 18th ult., and a petition was adopted, and handed on the [illegible] to Mr. Hon. Scott Gessner, signed by about [illegible] of the residents, representing his colleagues [illegible] an independent government for this [illegible]. The petition sets forth that, for several years, [illegible] of this place (formerly Greytown, of Holland) have elected their own officers, made [illegible] laws, [illegible] independent of either Nicaragua or Mosquito, to render peaceable, [illegible] for Mr. W. G. O.;) and that it was, in their [illegible], absolutely necessary the city and port of [illegible] Del Norte should be "free." (I write [illegible] Del Norte, because Greytown was [illegible] by the United States as a most villainous [illegible] of pirates; but, I presume, they still call it [illegible].) All these proceedings are endeavored [illegible] to be kept as close as possible; why so, it is not now [illegible].

[illegible] the designing, I have ascertained [illegible] a responsible person in this village that the visit of Sir WILLIAM GORE OUSELEY to the position, [illegible] amounts to nothing at all, the issue of it being [illegible] that he has no doubt the matter would soon be [illegible], and his acquaintance with the interests involved [illegible].

It is reported that Sir GORE expects to have all Central American matters adjusted by the month of March next. That would be rapid work, indeed, in this slow country. He knows his own business best, but we [illegible] have serious doubts of the correctness of his [illegible].

[illegible] Nicaragua Consul was recently appointed for this place; and, upon visiting the Valorous, he was [illegible] with the usual complement of guns for one of [illegible]. It would be a curious fact to ascertain, [illegible] diplomatic process Nicaragua has conceded [illegible] concessions to the company—portions even [illegible], or claimed, on the Atlantic Coast. Has this been [illegible] under the diplomatic talents of Mr W. G. O.? He certainly has been incessantly occupied [illegible] here, and he evinced no disposition [illegible] the Valorous, for the interests of his country, [illegible] as he did during his sojourn at Washington. His family are with him.

[illegible] the 30th ult., we have had very wet and unpleasant weather, [illegible] the Resaca apparently of them to sail [illegible], pulling her main-deck guns under cover of [illegible] and to though she would take her guns [illegible] to be some five miles outside, there [illegible] and every man on board her, must be very uncomfortable [illegible].

[illegible] Schooner Sarah [illegible] from Rio Dulce, [illegible] the 10th ultimo, with 200 passengers, including a large number thirty women and forty children.

On the appearance of the Washington off the harbor of San Juan, Col. CHIMES, who was acting as agent, dispatched a courier by the San Juan to go to the Pacific to ascertain if the Hermann had arrived at San Juan del Sur. The Catherine Maria, the little steamer that started with Col. CHIMES' messenger, returned in a few hours to San Juan del Norte, drawing too much water to get over the shallows of the river. She then started for the mouth of the Colorado, eighteen miles from San Juan, expecting to turn the shoals of the San Juan by ascending the former river to its junction with the latter. Capt. CURTIS having instructions to sail for Aspinwall in case the messenger did not get back by the 28th. On the morning of the 27th the Catherine Maria returned to San Juan.

In ascending, in reaching the Castillo Rapids, the agent landed, and, passing around the Rapids on foot, found the Lewis Frances ready to take them across the lake. At Fort San Carlos the steamer was brought to, the gentleman having heard that WALKER had landed at San Juan del Norte. An officer came on board and satisfied himself that this was no filibuster expedition—but, to make everything sure, placed fifteen armed men on her, and then suffered her to pass. The Lewis Frances went to Virgin Bay, where she got satisfactory information from Capt. GLASS, the master of a coasting schooner, that the Hermann had passed in the vicinity of San Juan del Sur on the 15th, she having left Panama on the 11th. The Lewis Frances then steamed away to Granada, to confer with the Government of Nicaragua on matters concerning the "time." On reaching that place she anchored about a mile and a half from the shore. It was soon perceived that the people were under arms, expecting WALKER had come. A man stood with a lighted match by the side of a 24-pounder, ready to "let drive." Matters were, however, soon explained. The people were satisfied, and informed the agent that "the Government" had removed from Managua to Leon, and, as he could not go to Leon, he decided to return to San Juan del Norte, which he did, in the Lewis Frances.

When the Catherine Maria reached the mouth of the Colorado, she was boarded by a boat of the British frigate Leopard, Capt. WARRINGTON, who made some slight inquiries, in a casual way, as to where the steamer was going, and then left. Two other boats of the Leopard were subsequently discovered, which joined the first boat, and then all returned to their ship.

The Washington was boarded by an officer of the Savannah, before she came to an anchor, who satisfied himself of the legal character of the expedition. After he had left, two British officers of the Leopard or Valorous, with their side arms, boarded her, and made very particular inquiries as to the character of the vessel. When told that the Savannah had boarded her, and was satisfied with the examination, the British officers still pushed their questions, asking if the officers of the Savannah had removed the hatches, examined the casks, &c., &c.

It may be worth while here to state, as an evidence of the recklessness of all concerned in this affair, that the Hermann arrived at Panama on the 9th, and that there was ample time for the captain or agent to have sent word on the 11th, by the British steamer, that the Hermann had gone to San Francisco direct, so that the news might have reached San Juan del Norte on the 12th, six days before the Washington reached there—saving a deal of time, trouble and money—and yet not even this was done!

On Sunday, the 28th, at 2 P. M., the Washington reached Aspinwall, about ten minutes after the arrival of the Moses Taylor, from New-York. And then and there she first learned positively that the Hermann had passed up to San Francisco 15 days previously.

The Railroad Company immediately put the Moses Taylor's passengers on the trains, and started them over to Panama, in order to prevent the Washingtonians from crowding into them; but, with all their haste, some 50 or 60 had mustered around the cars, so the order was given to start, without the mails, express bags, &c., which did not come over till next morning.

On Monday I took a run over to Aspinwall to see how things were going on. The scenes at the Consul's office and at the railroad office were truly heart-rending. The Railroad Company had negotiated, by telegraph, the best terms they could make with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company at Panama to take to San Francisco such of the passengers as had means. Cabin passage, including railroad ticket, was put at $165; second cabin, $140; steerage, $65. There were about 100 in all who had money enough to pay the lowest of these two rates; while perhaps 80 more were trying to sell watches, jewelry, keepsakes, and even their scanty clothing, to make up the lesser sum. Women, who had nothing, were camped down under balconies, wringing their hands and sobbing, while even stout men were shedding tears in despair.

Before leaving New-York Capt. CHADWICK, knowing the possibility and even probability that there might be no connection between the Washington and Hermann, insisted that some arrangement should be made with the Pacific Mail Steamship and Panama Railroad Companies by which, in case the passengers were forced to come to Aspinwall, they might be sure of being forwarded. Consequently Capt. C. was not only assured that this arrangement had been made, but was instructed in writing to proceed to Aspinwall as early as the 20th, in case he could not get his passengers across Nicaragua, and to forward them by this route, "all the arrangements having been made to that effect." When Capt. C. reached Aspinwall he could not for a long time be convinced that he, as well as his passengers, had been deceived. Not a line had come to Aspinwall contemplating any arrangement of the kind, and not a word, as I have reason to know, had been passed in New-York on the subject with an officer of either Company! The fact is, the persons engaged in this cruel scheme seem to have trusted to luck, Fraser's River, and that Providence would drop a cherry into their mouths. Fraser's River having given out, and Providence being heartily tired of Jos WALKER and William Walker, the thing fell through.

I wrote you that the Hermann had $48,000 lien on her for supplies, on leaving Panama. I find that the Washington is already tied up with $57,000 of debt, and Captain CHADWICK tried to raise more here, either to get the entirely destitute of his passengers to San Francisco or back to New-York.

I hear from the best authority that neither of the small steamers sent out to Nicaragua are fit for the service of the river, except at a time like the present, when the waters are comparatively high. They draw at least a foot too much water.

I also learn that three cargoes of coal are on their way to San Juan del Sur, to supply the steamer or steamers which the Company thought to send there. As the freight is undoubtedly made payable at San Juan, it is certain the Captains will have to sacrifice their cargoes on arrival to pay freight and charges.

I have ascertained that the whole number of the Washington's passengers, who were furnished tickets for California, and who went over the road last night at 8 o'clock, was one hundred and eighty-eight. After squeezing the lot dry, it was found there were forty women and children who had no means to get away. In this emergency, J. HOWLAND BULL, Esq., late agent of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company at Acapulco, and Captain CHADWICK, gave their personal security for money with which to forward them. So, there are, in all, one hundred and forty-two left, who are expected to return to-day in the Washington, although it is probable a considerable number of these may stop at Aspinwall, expecting to pick up a living in some way until they can get through.

After Captain CHADWICK, Mr. FOX, Mr. BULL and the agents of the Panama Railroad Company had done everything in their power to relieve the Washington of her passengers, there was still another thing to do, and that was to furnish her, with her remaining victims, the means to get back to New-York. No one, either at Aspinwall or Panama, could be found who would trust her owners or agents with a dollar, seeing the actual necessity there was that her passengers should not be thrown, in complete destitution, upon the Isthmus. Mr. FOX, United States Consul at Aspinwall, found himself compelled either to advance the requisite money for her port charges and supplies, or to see her passengers starve under his eyes. He did not hesitate, when the choice was to be made, but loaned her $2,000, which her Captain invested principally in provisions—and, this evening, the vessel sails for New-York. There, it is to be hoped, Mr. JOB TRUDE, the nominal owner of the Washington, as well as all others concerned, will be held to a strict account for their heartless speculation in the lives of their countrymen.

Two days before the arrival of the Washington, Gov. OBALDIA issued the following Proclamation, the object being to prevail upon as many as had no means to go forward, to return immediately to New-York:

[Here are our extracts of cases.]

The New-York Academy of Music vs. Jas. H. Hackett.—This suit was brought to recover $3,000 on a contract made on the 27th of September, 1854, by which the plaintiff agreed to lease the Academy of Music to defendant for two months at $2,500.

Defendants set up that the plaintiffs did not fulfil the Academy according to their agreement, in consequence of which it was unfit for use, and that Marie, one of the artists he had engaged, became ill therefrom, which prevented him from appearing in the course, to the damage of defendant for the sum of $3,000, which he claimed to recover from the rent alleged to be due from him to the plaintiffs. A verdict was rendered for the plaintiffs for $1,666 12. Subsequently Judge Ingraham, at Special Term, denied a motion for a new trial, from which defendant appealed to the General Term, which recently reversed the decision at Special Term and ordered a new trial.

THE NEW-HAVEN DIVORCE CASE.

BENNETT vs. BENNETT.

FLAT DENIALS OF DR. BENNETT.

NINTH DAY.

From Our Own Reporter.

New-Haven, Saturday, Dec. 11.

Dr. George Bennett has been on the witness-stand for two days, undergoing direct examination. At least one more day will be occupied in the same way, and then the cross-examination. Rare sport is looked for when Judge Blackman and the witness have to deal with each other. At times the counsel get terribly befogged in the attempt to get at the meaning of Bennett's testimony. He is certainly a remarkable witness. The conduct of his examination reminds one forcibly of navigating a steamboat on the Mississippi. It is constantly such phrases as "Stop him"—"Go on"—"Start him"—"Hold up"—"Slower" The Doctor's infirmity prevents him from hearing anything less than a shout, and his friend, Governor Dutton, who is a venerable white-haired gentleman, has a hard time of it. The Governor sits in the witness' chair, at the right hand of Bennett, and the latter stands while giving his evidence. Once to-day Judge Blackman roused the Doctor by asking "what it was he didn't recollect," the Doctor replying fairly that he didn't "recollect anything that he didn't know." Whereupon Mr. Blackman appealed to the Court against the Doctor's insolence. During the whole proceedings Mrs. Bennett has occupied a seat next her counsel, between him and the witness-box.

The previous history of the parties is interesting. Dr. Bennett has been a resident of New-Haven for some eight years. He is among the B.'s in the City Directory as "George Bennett, pill-maker, No. 2 Dow-street." Poor when he married, ten years ago, he has acquired a considerable fortune in his business, estimated all the way from $20,000 (the lowest figure,) up to $50,000, and even twice that. He owns sundry pieces of property in New-Haven, appears in the tax-list as having $12,000 out at interest, and counts among his possessions the house in George street, of which so much is said in his testimony. This house is now occupied by Mr. John G. North, an insurance officer, who has been called to testify in this case. The house fronts on High-street. Its garden is bounded on one side by Dow-street, and at the foot of the garden is a little office, (mentioned very frequently at the trial,) in which the Doctor just now abides in solitude. He has his printing presses there, and conducts all his business on the premises, lodging included.

Mrs. Bennett is residing temporarily with friends in the city. She has three children; one an infant, eight months old, born since the commencement of these proceedings for divorce. The lady is from a respectable family, of moderate circumstances, at Birmingham, a town a few miles from New-Haven. Dr. Bennett testifies as to the manner in which he met her. Miss Allis was in the habit of calling at a neighbor's house while engaged in a millinery shop there. There the Doctor met her, was struck by her appearance, and thought it would "pay," as he expressed it, to go over to Birmingham to see her. He went, and the young lady became Mrs. Bennett, although the Doctor's attentions appear to have been of a rather summary sort. He testified the other day that while paying his addresses, he "couldn't call very often, for he was in debt, and his mind was occupied with his business, and he could not afford much time for courting." The parties have lived apart for about a year. You will see by the Doctor's evidence that he is endeavoring to put Mrs. Bennett under a cloud, on the ground of improper conduct with a certain young gentleman. I am informed that she will be called to give rebutting evidence.

The direct examination of Dr. Bennett was resumed at 9 o'clock this morning. The following testimony was taken:

Dr. Bennett (continued)—I recollect one day, while Mrs. Bennett was sick and lying on her bed, I came in, and found Horace Smith there: I felt very much excited, but said nothing to them; I went out and said to the nurse that I was astonished that she should allow a man to enter the bedroom. (Witness was checked in this part of his evidence.)

Q.—Is there anything else in relation to Horace Smith that you wish to say? A.—No.

Q.—Well? A.—She says I put out the gas, and says when she had company I would go down cellar and turn the gas off; there was one time when I did such a thing; it might have been twice; then there were one or two girls there, very young girls, and I thought, along before night, that I would have a little sport; along in the afternoon I hunted around till I got a wrench, and had a lamp all nicely trimmed up, with matches on it; first, I went to see if the wrench would fit the metre nice; I then placed my lamp and matches by the outside cellar door, and waited very impatiently for night to come; night did come, (laughter,) and Mrs. Bennett and a girl or two, I cannot tell how many, were there; I went to my lamp and struck up a light, and went rather on tiptoe to the gas meter; I applied the wrench and gave it a turn, and I ran like a good fellow out under the evergreens, (laughter;) I rather guessed there was a little excitement to know what was the matter; after they hunted around some time—not very long, though; Mrs. Bennett is rather quick to find out a trick, (tittering;)—she soon found out what caused the light to be turned off; I then came into the house, and, after it was lighted, I went up stairs.

Q.—Did you light up the gas again? A.—I didn't light up again—oh, no! (laughter.) I came into the house, making as if I didn't know anything about it; but I bit my lip a little; couldn't keep in, and it was all let out, and I think we all enjoyed the joke very well; about going to Branford, we went there to spend a little time; we took some furniture with us, and the little cradle, I think, was in, and I believe the little baby was in that; all seemed to be pretty well wedged in together, and I think Mrs. Bennett and myself and the rest in among it; we drove up to the Branford House, I believe it goes by that name, and I think there was a lady or two of our acquaintance standing there as we drove up, and it was along about dusk, and I think my man was with me, and I think I was in pretty good humor; I helped unload the wagon, and I guess the first thing I took hold of was the cradle, or I might have taken up the baby first, with the blankets, and laid it upon the piazza not being a good while ago, and haven't charged my mind much about it; yet I am sure I did not whip the little thing, for I am dear fond of and love little children; our little children had the scarlet fever one time in George-street.

Q.—What about taking Mr. Dow to go over with your wife to Branford? A.—I don't recollect; I remember Mr. Dow came; I don't know—I shouldn't wonder—I don't recollect right. (Laughter.)

Q.—Well, take up the next subject. A.—My little children, when we were in George-street, had the scarlet fever; both at a time, and I think in one bed; they required a great deal of attention, and I had a very good nurse, a woman about forty-five; she was there in our house; I generally paid all the attention to them that I possibly could, both day and night; as far as I recollect now I spent the half of a night with them; when I was not there, and many times when I was, Mrs. Bennett was there too; and I remember of his was there the nurse came to me, and whispered, (laughter,) and Mrs. Bennett and the girl in the kitchen would take her place; so we got along all right; we had the best of help, and the children had the best of care; I remember one night Mrs. Bennett was going into the front room to bed, and would not occupy the room adjoining where the children slept, and where I slept, and would have been much handier to the children, for I could go to the other side of the house in that instance; this was quite late in the evening; I had not left there with the children, and the nurse was there at the time; when Mrs. Bennett went to the room I followed on after her; she would have went [illegible]

NEWS OF THE DAY.

Our columns, this morning, contain an extraordinary amount of important and interesting news, both foreign and domestic. The steamship Persia, after an unusually protracted passage, arrived, yesterday afternoon, from Liverpool, whence she sailed on the 27th November. Her advices are of interest. Numerous disastrous shipwrecks had occurred on the English coast. Others are reported from the Mediterranean, and still others from the southwestern coast of China. The work of laying the shore end of the Atlantic Cable at Valentia had been commenced, but had been presently suspended for lack of wire. In the meantime intimations had presented themselves that the difficulty with the cable was close to the shore line. The death of Admiral Lord Lyons is announced from England, and that of M. Boulay de la Meurthe from France. The intelligence of Lord Napier's removal to Berlin is confirmed. The Hon. Richard Lyons, now Lord Lyons, had been appointed his successor; but it is still unknown how far his accession to the Peerage may influence his acceptance or declination. The trial of M. de Montalembert had resulted in his conviction, and that of his publisher. The Count was sentenced to six months' imprisonment, and to a fine of 3,000 francs. The London Press is severe in its strictures upon the proceedings. The subject of the Nicaragua transit occupies much attention in Europe. There appears to be a general disposition to check the American pretensions in that quarter; and to abrogate the Monroe doctrine. Unverified rumors were afloat in England and at Paris, to the effect that a combined fleet, English and French, had been ordered to San Juan. Spain had expedited the last division of her Western squadron to Cuba. Gen. Concha is to be superseded in the Captain-Generalship of Cuba, as soon as the Mexican expedition is consummated. From China we have word that the Chinese Commissioners, who were to arrange the [illegible] for the prosecution of the war, had arrived at Shanghai. The Persia brings no intelligence of the missing steamer, the Indian Empire. As that vessel sailed from New-York, Oct. 25, and from St. John's, Oct. 29, only two days less than a month had expired since she had been heard from, and gloomy apprehensions in regard to her may reasonably be entertained. Insurance had been sought among London underwriters at as high rates as 35@40 per cent, and in vain.

By the arrival of the Moses Taylor we have our California files to Nov. 20, but the telegraphic abstracts of news, via Tehuantepec and the overland route, have anticipated the most important intelligence by this arrival. The news from Fraser's River is better than that received by the last arrival. The miners speak encouragingly of the prospects in that gold region.

The war between Peru and Ecuador had advanced one or two stages by the issue of a proclamation by the Peruvian Government falling but little short of a declaration of war, and an advance of troops toward the frontier of Ecuador, falling but little short of an invasion. Hostilities had proceeded no further on either side. The correspondence between the American and Peruvian Governments in regard to the arrested guano ships appears at full length in the Lima Comercio. Buenaventura is idle in Bolivia, awaiting the progress of events in Peru.

Affairs in Chili threaten a speedy convulsion. Men of all parties seem preparing for a revolution, an event hardly pre-calculated upon by the Messrs. Barron, when they negotiated the recent Chilian loan in London. Any attempt, it is stated, has been made to assassinate President Montt.

The steamship City of Washington, which left Panama on Nov. 24, arrived here last night. Her news has been received briefly by telegraph from Cape Race; and is now anticipated by the Persia.

The steamship Washington, of the Nicaragua line, arrived at this port on Saturday from San Juan del Norte and Aspinwall. She left New-York on the 7th of November, and arrived at San Juan on the 10th, learning there that the Hermann had not touched at San Juan del Sur, she proceeded. After a week's delay, to Aspinwall. Part of her passengers—such of them as had money to pay their traveling expenses to San Francisco—were sent to Panama and shipped on board the Pacific Mail Company's steamer. The remainder, greatly exasperated and distressed at the treatment they had received, were brought back to New-York. While at San Juan the Washington was boarded by two officers of H. B. M. ship Valorous, who questioned Captain Churchill after a manner that reminds us of late scenes in the Gulf of Mexico. Flag-officer McIlvaine promptly remonstrated against the interference, and a correspondence ensued between him and the British officer in command, which, we are assured, ended satisfactorily to all parties concerned. The presence of Sir Wm. Gore Ouseley on board the Valorous gives an importance to this visit of British officers to an American ship, which it would not otherwise possess. Our correspondents, both at San Juan del Norte and at Aspinwall, enter very fully into the history of the affair, and furnish us with many important and interesting particulars in relation to it.

The United States steam frigate Niagara, which left Charleston on the 19th of September, with the Africans taken from the slaver Echo, returned to this port on Saturday morning, from her philanthropic mission. The Niagara arrived at Monrovia, on the 8th of November, and landed her dusky passengers at that port, together with provisions, clothing, and other stores furnished for their support and comfort by the American Colonization Society. Seventy-five of the negroes had died on the passage, leaving but 200 out of the original number received on board at Charleston. Our correspondent, writing on board the Niagara, gives a most interesting account of the demeanor of the Africans on the voyage, and of the means taken to render them as comfortable as the circumstances of the case would permit.

[illegible] from Washington is not exciting. The Senate was not in session on Saturday, and the House was occupied with the Watrous impeachment case. The chief topic of discussion at the Capital appears to be the removal of Senator Toucey from the Chairmanship of the Territorial Committee, which will probably be accomplished to-day. The wrath of the President against the offending Senator has not been mollified in the least, and it will doubtless fall with terrible effect upon each of his friends as its Executive arm can reach them.

We learn from our special correspondent that [illegible] of the British Government to conscript seamen from the high waters of the Gulf [illegible]

[illegible] Senator Gwin, with a view to bringing his name before the people as a candidate for the Presidency in 1856; but it is not thought that such a convention will hold of his numerous friends in Washington. The defeat of Fuller, it is said, has been of benefit to Collector Schell in Washington, and may prevent his removal. President Buchanan, notwithstanding his affair with Senator Douglas, which will probably require all his energies, has undertaken a little war with the Times, and threatens to deprive the correspondents of this journal of Executive favors in the way of news, but, as they have never been in the habit of relying upon him, it will not make any difference. An interesting expose is on the point of being made in consequence of a quarrel between Stedman, the nominal printer of the House, and Wendell, who does the printing. Mr. Stedman, not being satisfied with his share of the spoils, has threatened to resign as printer and thus throw the sub-printer out of his job.

That interesting domestic drama, the Bennett divorce case, is still on at New-Haven. Saturday was the ninth day of the examination, Dr. Bennett's direct examination is not yet concluded. He testifies that he signed the paper drawn in August, 1855, in which he makes acknowledgments of misconduct, in ignorance of its contents, and now denies that he ever knowingly made any admissions. The case will probably occupy the greater part of this week. Mrs. Bennett is to be called again, to give rebutting evidence.

Twenty-one canal boats, laden with grain and produce, are frozen in at Fultonville. Further efforts to reach tide-water this season have been abandoned.

Among the Coroners' inquests reported in today's Times, there is one upon the body of Hugh M. Luke, the unfortunate fireman who was killed at the Harlem Railroad Depôt fire; another upon Gotz, who was killed by Foerster in West Broadway; a third upon the body of an unknown German, who is supposed to have died from violence; a fourth upon Miss Anne Morrow, who killed herself for love; a fifth upon Mrs. Stinson, once a fashionable boarding-house keeper, but who, after many reverses of fortune, sank into the depths of poverty and degradation, and finally committed suicide; and a sixth upon Bernard Gilligan, an employe of the Manhattan Gas Company, who was thrown from his wagon and killed.

On Saturday, in the Supreme Court Circuit, the Attorney-General and the District-Attorney addressed the Court and Jury on behalf of the prosecution in the case of Cangemi. Messrs. Ashmead and Blankman replied for the defence. After an elaborate charge from the Judge, the Jury retired shortly before 8 P. M., and at midnight, yesterday, had not agreed upon a verdict. It is understood that there is no possibility of their agreeing. The three previous trials of this wretched man have already cost the City about $30,000. In the Court of General Sessions, on Saturday, Mr. John Graham argued, before Recorder Barnard, in support of a motion to quash the indictments against Charles Devlin, Charles Turner, Enoch Dean and others, for alleged frauds on the City Treasury. Ex-Judge Whiting replied for the people. The recorder took the papers, and reserved his decision.

A large number of arrests were made on Saturday, of various persons accused of violating the law in relation to the sale of lottery tickets in this City. Among those for whose arrest warrants were issued were the publishers of nearly all the Sunday papers, and other weekly journals. Writs were also issued for the arrest of Benjamin Wood and George P. Eddy, said to be the proprietors of nearly all the lotteries in the Union. The officers seized about $24,000 in money and tickets, which they found upon the persons of two lottery agents, who were just on the point of stepping across the River to New-Jersey. The persons arrested were all held to answer, and will appear before Judge Russell this morning, by whom the writs were issued.

Mr. Hugh Luke, the fireman who was killed at the Centre-street fire, was buried yesterday with becoming honors. The whole Fire Department turned out and presented an imposing appearance. The deceased was buried at Greenwood, beneath the Firemen's Monument—set apart for those who fall in the discharge of their perilous duties.

Cotton was quite active, and ¼c. ₩ lb. dearer, on Saturday. Flour was in good demand at very firm prices. Corn was freely purchased, mainly on speculation, and it closed buoyantly. Wheat was moderately dealt in. Oats were in active request. Pork was depressed and lower. Lard and Beef were heavy. Coffee and Sugars attracted more attention. Freights continued [illegible], with 620 vessels of all classes in port.

The Nicaragua Imbroglio.

It is time that the position of affairs on the Isthmus should be cleared of the mist and fog which surround it. The United States must not be suffered to drift into a great war at the pleasure of half a dozen contending petty interests and private speculations. Whatever risks the nation is to run in the assertion of great principles must be assumed deliberately and in the face of day. And it is the duty, as well as the immediate interest, therefore, of every intelligent citizen to know precisely how we stand in regard to Nicaragua, and what may be expected to come of our relations with her Government.

The steamship Washington returned to this City on Saturday from San Juan del Norte, with a serious story of a British protectorate in the Nicaraguan waters, and with a number of unfortunate passengers, disappointed of their intended voyage to San Francisco. This vessel was the pioneer of the line proposed to be run by the Nicaraguan Transit Company, commonly known as the "White" Company, and claiming a right of transit through the Nicaraguan dominions, under a grant negotiated through the former Minister of that country, Señor Yrisarri. The passengers who embarked at New-York on board of the Washington, were assured that they would be transferred across the Isthmus to the port of San Juan del Sur, where they would be taken up by another steamer, the Hermann, and conveyed to California. On arriving at San Juan del Norte, they found to their dismay that the steamer Hermann was not awaiting them on the Pacific side; that her captain, after sending her directly on to San Francisco in charge of his first officer, had returned himself to the United States; and that they were consequently without the means of accomplishing their voyage. But this was not all. They were further notified that the promises held out by the "White" Company at New-York were essentially delusive: that the control claimed by the Company over the Transit route was disavowed by the Nicaragua Government; and that no person would be allowed to pass through the Nicaraguan dominions in virtue of any contract made with the said Company. This notification was, in fact, but the confirmation of a warning publicly given to the same effect before the departure of the Washington from New-York, by the representative of Nicaragua, General Jerez, in this City, for giving which salutary warning General Jerez was as publicly rebuked by Mr. Secretary Cass. The "White" Company is thus called upon to give satisfactory explanations to the passengers upon whom it has inflicted such serious injury, as well as to the public at large, of two separate but coincident circumstances deeply involving its credit and character. In the first place, it must account for the extraordinary conduct of the Commander of the Hermann; in the second place, for the attempt to assert a right which had been, as we are instructed, most formally withdrawn by the Government which had conferred it. While awaiting these explanations we shall take the liberty of offering our own hypothesis of the origin of the particular complications by which things have been brought into their present state.

Nicaragua professes herself perfectly ready to open the transit through her territories to any Company, or to any individual, capable of organizing and putting into operation an effective system of communication. She declares that the "White" Company has forfeited all title to her consideration by failing to perform [illegible] Company to another Company of American citizens whose arrangements are now making for opening a complete Isthmus transit route. This new Company is composed chiefly of Pennsylvanians, a people pacific in virtue of their origin, and connected in several instances with the ruling powers at Washington. Among them are some of the particular and personal friends of the President; but the "pulse of the machine" is believed to beat in this City, and in the bosom of a leading contractor in matters in Nicaragua, Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt, who is now sustaining an unequal conflict in our Courts of law against the representatives of the old original Atlantic and Pacific Transit Company, of whose affairs he was long the sole manager. It is therefore by no means impossible that a distinct connection may eventually be traced between the conduct of the Captain of the Hermann, in disappointing the passengers by the Washington, and the law-suit now pending for the recovery of the property belonging to the stockholders of that celebrated Company, which was stifled in the embrace of General William Walker in the time of that worthy's ever-memorable "Presidency" of Nicaragua. For if the "White" Company can be overthrown, and a negotiation effected by which the proprietors of the old Transit Company may be indemnified, at the hands of what we may call the new "Jerez" Company, for their heavy losses and their much patience, the said proprietors may doubtless be induced to acquiesce in the arrangement, the "multangular duel" of years be brought to an end, and the Transit really opened.

All this, however, does not affect the pretensions of the "White" Company to disregard the formal extinction by the Nicaraguan Government of their rights over the route. It is not easy to see on what those pretensions are based. We must not suffer ourselves to be blinded by exciting accounts of "outrages" committed by British boarders or Nicaraguan soldiers, to the fact that on the showing of Nicaragua the steamer Washington had no business to land her passengers without authority at San Juan del Norte. That she was not regarded by the representatives of our own Government as entitled to the character of a legitimate claimant on the route, is sufficiently proved by the attitude of our men-of-war in those waters. Our naval officers, who are never slow to assert the national honor, made no attempt to interfere with the exercise by the British of the police duties which they had probably been invited by Nicaragua to perform. So far as the voyage and experience of the Washington are concerned, there is absolutely nothing in the news which she brings us to warrant the apprehension that either the Nicaraguan authorities, or the foreign squadrons on the Nicaraguan coast, have taken up any ground which we are called upon to contest with them.

But there are other parties still whose proceedings are to be taken into the account in contemplating this Central American imbroglio. In spite of all the efforts of the officers of our laws and revenue at Mobile, the schooner Susan has escaped from that port, and now carries, perhaps, the peace of the world on her expeditionary cruise in the Gulf. For if we are to put faith in the reports brought us by the Washington on this head, the forces of England and France in the Gulf are prepared to stop and seize the Susan wherever she may be found. Should that vessel, sailing under the flag of the Union, be brought to and captured on the high seas by a French or English cruiser, we shall be brought face to face with the gravest issues, and at once.

Yet we have reason to question the correctness of this story. We believe that the governments of England, France and the United States are perfectly agreed upon the policy to be pursued in the case of fillibusters attempting a descent upon Central America. We believe it to be entirely understood between ourselves on the one hand, and the Western allies on the other, that, while our flag shall protect any vessel on the high seas from search and seizure, excepting in the case of slaves and pirates, such search and seizure being then made at the risk of the power attempting it, any one of the powers shall be at liberty to furnish Nicaragua, at her request, with the means of repelling an actual invasion, and of bringing any fillibustering force to justice after it shall have fairly entered the Nicaraguan jurisdiction. If, then, in the exercise of this liberty, the forces of England or France should be employed to break up any expedition formed within the Nicaraguan frontiers, we shall certainly have no just cause of complaint, or interference. In such a case, the forces of those powers would be doing legitimately just what Commodore Paulding did illegitimately, and our only ground of indignation would be with the weakness or connivance of our own home authorities in allowing the departure from our shores of such an expedition. If we demand as of right supremacy in the affairs of this Continent, we must vindicate our title to that supremacy by showing ourselves able to maintain the authority of our own laws at home. The protectorate of Central America must begin at New-Orleans and Mobile; and the "sympathizers" of the South may be assured that the country will support no other. When we shall have thoroughly stifled the lawless fires that play along our own coasts of the Gulf, we may rightfully advance our claims to be heard as the natural guardians of order and commerce in the New World.

Meanwhile we are constantly exposed to the risk of the most deplorable collision in the Gulf of Mexico. Every expedition which sets out from this Country in the interest or in the spirit of General William Walker affords a fresh pretext to the governments of England and France for maintaining and increasing their fleets in these waters. And we have much reason to believe that one at least of these powers is not indisposed to improve any plausible opportunity that may occur, for asserting claims in regard to the Isthmus which we can neither concede without giving up the position assumed for us by the President, nor repel without inviting a most unnecessary and perilous conflict. It should be our policy to deprive both France and England of any pretext for interfering with the affairs of Central America by extinguishing the fillibustering ambitions from which alone these pretexts now spring. In the face of the escape of the Susan, the moral force of our Government stands, for the moment rebuked and impotent. This moral force must be recovered, and speedily, if we are to avoid the most serious crisis that has yet impended over the nation.

A Slight Difficulty.—It is very easy for the President in his Message to propose all sorts of schemes for purchasing, protecting and conquering foreign territory. But, as we learn [illegible] Company, such as was given to the City of his parentage. The committee, it appears, AlFakim, he says, will not even take any steps towards such a consummation. This is unfortunate for the President. But if he does get all these little matters off his hands, he will have the more time and money to devote to the defeat of Douglas. That will probably be as large a war as he will find himself qualified to undertake.

The Italian Question.

Madame Mazio, the "Miss Weeps" of the latest troubles in Italy, a lady who has done much and suffered much in the cause of Italian freedom, and has been one of the most active and ablest agents Mazzini has ever had, is now delivering a course of lectures in this City, upon the subject she has most at heart. She has discoursed already upon the present condition of Italy, and on Wednesday night treated her audience to an account of the Martyrs of Italian Liberty. There is nobody who has a particle of sympathy with human suffering, or a particle of detestation for tyranny and wrong, who will not feel an interest in the lady's subject; and nobody who admires devotion in a good cause can avoid wishing her all possible success in her labors.

But in spite of our sympathy with her and her theme, we cannot help saying that the question—What do Italian patriots propose to do? What are their aims and how do they mean to achieve them? [illegible] seeing themselves upon our minds. We desire as much as anybody to see Italy free and happy, but so far as our knowledge goes, nothing is doing to make her either the one or the other. As year after year of this agitation passes by, as lecture follows lecture, and speech speech, and dinner dinner, we look for some tangible proposition, or plan of campaign, or scheme of general "soulevement," or something in short which history, or experience, or common sense fortifies us in believing, will make an impression on a well organized and ably officered army of two or three hundred thousand men. We should be the last in the world to speak either slightingly or depreciatingly of men who, like Mazzini, have sacrificed everything that makes life worth having, to the consistent and unshaken assertion of a great principle, to the profession of a despised and outraged faith; but soberly and seriously, we do not see what progress he or his friends have made towards the establishment of Italian independence. A good speech is a fine thing; an able manifesto is a fine thing; and a noble thought is finer than either; and they all three have their place and do their work in the world; but these are not all that are needed to shake off the yoke of a foreign conqueror.

If half of what we hear of the state of the popular mind in Italy be true, the Italian people have for years been as full of discontent, as conscious of their degradation, as violently hostile to their tyrants, as the most ardent patriot could desire. As far as all these things go, we believe they afford one of the finest examples on record of indomitable resistance to the debasing influences of tyranny. Nobles and peasants have alike resisted the blandishments of the oppressor's power. The Austrian officers still stalk through the streets of Venice and Milan, as hunted, as foreign, as detested [illegible] whimpy race cannot accuse them of want of civil courage, of the slightest trace of subservience to their rulers, of the slightest indication either of treachery or repentance. The only chance of proving the strength of their devotion to the country, by an open resistance on a great scale, which has been afforded them since 1815, occurred in 1849, and they amply availed themselves of it. All Lombardy marched against the Austrians. All Lombardy was as full of high resolves and noble longings as either Mazzini or Madame Mamo could wish. The patriot army beat the Austrians everywhere, and captured all their strongholds. But there the matter ended. All that speechifying could do was done; but how little it can do in an armed conflict with a great military Power, the result proved. It can send any number of enthusiastic young men to the field, but alas! can do but little towards keeping them there. The Austrians fell back, called up their reserves, returned, and the struggle was soon over, in spite of wonderful gallantry on the part of the Italians. The Lombard army vanished before Haynau and Radetsky. Manin held out a few months at Venice, but held out in vain.

If the experience of 1848-9 proved anything, it proved the terrible difficulty of fighting a large organized force in an open country, near its base, with popular levies. If there was any necessity on earth which it ought to have impressed upon the minds of Italian patriots, it was the necessity, not of stirring up the people, for the poor people showed themselves to be easily stirred, but of providing some plan of organization which should make their resistance in the field tenacious; which should deprive defeat of the demoralizing influence which it always exercises upon raw volunteers, and of uniting the patriots of the various States in hearty cooperation. Sardinia has always seemed to us the best possible nucleus for the Italian forces to concentrate themselves upon. Sardinia made the best and most promising resistance to Austria in 1849. She fought the only battles worthy of the name which were fought in the open field. She has a gallant, well-officered and well-organized army; she has a flag, a Government and a Treasury; has a locus standi at all European Courts, and a voice in all international councils. We have been flattering ourselves, or endeavoring to do so, for a long while, that, in the next rising which took place, the Lombards and Venetians, taught by bitter experience the difference between the enthusiasm which wins one battle or defends one town, and the trained courage which tramps stubbornly through long campaigns, would seek Italian freedom under the Constitutional flag of Piedmont. Madame Mario and Mazzini both denounce our scheme as a mere delusion. They will have none of Sardinia, and hate her with that intense hatred which sectional differences unhappily so often produce. Perhaps they know what is best for Italy. But we know that until some radical change occurs in the relations of European Powers—until Austria receives a deadly blow from some other quarter—Italians cannot drive out the Austrian army, and keep it out, with patriotic levies. We feel satisfied that, if Sardinia will not do, something like Sardinia is absolutely necessary, to make an Italian insurrection successful; and so far as we know, Mazzini does not propose to provide anything of the sort.

One word with regard to Madame Mario's denunciation of the world for its admiration of success,—apropos of its slighting Mazzini for his want of success,—we cannot help saying. The world is a bad world enough we admit, but we really cannot see that in this matter it is so greatly to blame. It has no possible means of judging of a man's capabilities, except by [illegible] to his family and friends, by the tone of his whole thoughts, all the well-laid plans, all the energy and daring which may lie hid in them. It judges of people's moral character by their lives, and judges of their talents by the results of their labors. It concludes Louis Napoleon is a clever man, because he has performed an exploit which required a display of some of the highest moral and intellectual qualities. It concludes Mazzini does not possess executive ability, because he has never accomplished anything he set about. But it acknowledges, we believe, that while the former is a very bad man, the latter is honest and conscientious, and we think all this is perfectly reasonable. If we are to be called upon to make heroes of everybody who "dreams noble things," and makes noble efforts, we should really have all the gentlemen and grands hommes incompris, upon our hands in a few days, and have to chewer incense upon everybody who would take the trouble of assuring us that he longed to be great.

A Good Time for a Belated Explanation.—When it was first announced that the Hermann did not stop at San Juan for the Washington's passengers, but went direct to San Francisco, by order of her Commander, who left her at Panama, he published the following card:

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Sir—I have noticed in the Times of this morning an article in reference to my withdrawal from the command of the steamship Hermann at Panama. There are many [illegible] in the said article, that I only wait a proper time to make public my statement of facts. In the meantime, I beg to assure the public that the "powerful influences" brought to bear upon me were not directed by any outward interference designed to affect the interests of any Company whatever, but were of such a nature that I would have been something among them, a [illegible] had they not directed my movements homeward. These will all be made public when I deem it necessary.

I am, Sir, yours respectfully,
EDWARD CAVENDY.

New-York, Dec. 4, 1855.

We respectfully submit to Capt. Cavendy that the proper time has come for such an explanation as is herein promised. He must be very well aware that the general sentiment of the public regards the whole operation as a heartless, unprincipled piece of swindling on the part of somebody, by which the property, health and comfort of hundreds of men, women and children have been deliberately sacrificed to the stock-jobbing interests of rival Companies. The Hermann went out under a distinct engagement,—to stop at San Juan and take the Washington's passengers. Her captain suddenly and mysteriously deserted her at Panama and came home,—giving orders, moreover, that she was not to stop at San Juan. How came he to do this? Was it in pursuance of a purpose formed before he sailed,—or on the strength of communications made by somebody who met him at Panama? Who was this person,—whom did he represent and what were his statements? The public will be very glad to hear Captain Cavendy's promised explanations on this subject.

The Bearing of the Washington.—Our Aspinwall correspondent gives us a full and very interesting account of the proceedings of the British officers who boarded the Washington. He also states the substance of the correspondence which passed between those officials and Commodore McIlvaine, who is at the head of the American squadron in those waters, and who lost no time in calling them to account for what appeared to be so great a violation of American rights.

No decisive opinion can be formed on this subject until the publication in full of this correspondence. But we infer from the abstract which our correspondent has given that the result was in the main satisfactory, and that no special danger of a rupture of friendly relations has been incurred. We are inclined to believe that a full understanding exists between our Government and that of England in regard to the course to be pursued concerning fillibusters in Nicaragua. The reports industriously circulated in this City, and, as it appears, still more confidently and injuriously in Nicaragua, that the passengers by the Washington were Walker's men, may have led to misconception in the minds of British naval officers. At all events we confidently look for a satisfactory explanation of this affair.

Amusements.

Academy of Music.—The grand gala festival in aid of the funds of the Mount Vernon Association occupies so much of the public thought, that it is unnecessary to call attention to it in the usual way. The patriotic object for which this Association labors is appreciated, we believe, by the whole community. A series of entertainments perfectly unrivalled in variety of excellence will be inaugurated on Saturday next, and continued on Tuesday and Wednesday. All the principal musical and dramatic artists now in New-York have volunteered their services for the occasion, the whole winding up with a grand ball at the Academy. The tickets for this mammoth and unexceptionable entertainment will be sold, to-day, at a variety of offices. There will, we trust, be a patriotic response to the appeal of the ladies of the Mount Vernon Association.

Overa.—Mr. Ullman's campaign in Boston has opened brilliantly. Two performances have been given to fine houses, and a third was announced for Saturday. The Bostonians have not yet heard Hera Pereas in his really great part of Marcel—an impersonation as nearly perfect as art and genius can make it; nor have they heard the renowned basso in "Robert le Diable," a genre performance equally perfect. The "Huguenots" was announced for Saturday. The Athenian critics do not differ in their verdict about Piccolomini. They say nearly the same things that have been said of her in this City. On the whole she has made a good impression, and will "run" for two or three weeks.

Wallack's Theatre.—Mr. Wallack's splendid revival of Shakespeare's "Merchant of Venice" is the attraction here. It is the art sensation of the season, and will crowd the theatre for several weeks.

Laura Keene's Theatre.—Mr. Tom Taylor's "American Cousin" enters upon its ninth week to-night. It will shortly be withdrawn to make room for a splendid revival of Shakespeare's "Midsummer Night's Dream."

Niblo's Garden.—The Ravel troupe remain here for another week only. The great fairy pantomime of "Bianca" and "Acalista" will be played to-night.

Burton's Theatre.—Shakespeare's tragedy of "Hamlet" will be played here to-night for the purpose of introducing Mr. C. C. Howe to an American audience. The successful farce of "In and Out of Place" is the afterpiece.

Bowery Theatre.—A dramatic version of the new Ledger story called "Richard Hoffman" will be produced here to-night. The caste includes all the principal artists of the company.

Purdy's Theatre.—Mr. J. B. Howe's new and original four-act local drama, called "The Woman of the World," will be produced here to-night. In addition to the usual scenic attractions, a new Panorama of the Hudson River has been prepared expressly for this piece. All the leading members of the company are in the distribution.

Broadway Theatre.—The great Circus Company of Sands, Nathan & Co. gives a grand equestrian performance this evening. The Broadway is the best establishment in the City for this kind of entertainment.

Barnum's Museum.—The wonderful Zavistowski Ballet and Pantomime Troupe has created a decided excitement here. The performances of these remarkable juveniles are remarkable, and should be witnessed by the public at large.

Minstrelsy.—Wood's Temple of Ethiopian Minstrelsy, and Campbell's, are the best places in the City for hearing the Minstrels.

Concert.—Madame Anderson Graever's Concert, on Friday evening, at Dodworth's Saloon, attracted a full audience, and entertained the lovers of music [illegible] Dodworth's Saloon.—Arthur Napoleon gives his last score musicals to-morrow evening.

INTERESTING FROM WASHINGTON.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, Saturday, Dec. 8.

The recent escape of Billmeyer from Mexico excites intense interest in official quarters, and it is considered that if they shall be arrested by the Mexicans and other foreign forces, the volunteer officers of this country would be amenable to the highest degree of excitement, and immediate preparations would be made to their rescue. Intelligence is daily received in foreign missions of our Government urgent for prompt action, and a more angry and threatening state of things probably never existed between our Government and those of Great Britain, France and Spain. The question would arise whether or not European Governments should be allowed to interfere for the regulation of affairs upon the American Continent, to the prevention of which, our government is committed.

The Union of this morning, referring to the subject, says: "It is to be hoped that our foreign friends may yet succeed in [illegible] bringing her back to our ports, and preserving the peaceful relations which hitherto have existed between us. The subject is still under a cloud, and we are in a state of uncertainty and suspense. Upon the existence of our relations in the waters of the Gulf may depend the continuance of the peace of the world."

The contract for putting in new boilers in the steamer San Jacinto, has been accepted by the Phœnix Iron Works, New-York.

Washington, Sunday, Dec. 9.

The recent intelligence from Nicaragua has produced much excitement, while the rumoring of the community, by Messrs. [illegible] and others by gentlemen in high official position, which are believed, as a renewal of the right of search, involving the most serious consequences.

The President will send to the Senate this week, his nominations, any appointment or appointments whose status were investigated by the Naval Court of Inquiry.

Mr. Ewetson will shortly introduce in the Senate a bill providing conditions for the future admission of States into the Union.

XXXVth Congress—Second Session.

SENATE... Washington, Saturday, Dec. 8.

The Senate is not in session to-day.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Washington, Saturday, Dec. 8.

Twenty thousand extra copies of the President's Message, and accompanying documents, and twenty extra copies of the Report of the Secretary of the Treasury were ordered to be printed.

On motion of Mr. Stanton, of North Carolina, a resolution was adopted, calling on the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish a statement of the different payments from the Treasury from 1850 to date, under the heads of ordinary, extraordinary and public debt.

The House resumed the consideration of the Watrous impeachment case.

Mr. Stewart, of Maryland, had not seen in the testimony any evidence of official misconduct to lead him to believe Judge Watrous guilty.

Mr. Haskin, of Texas, argued that there was sufficient ground for an impeachment.

Mr. Clark, of New-York, with the greatest amount of deliberation, had come to the conclusion that the interests of the country require that there be no impeachment.

Mr. Seward, of Ohio, briefly argued that there was no case made for impeachment. There was not only an absence of official misconduct, but no the prudence of indictment. The whole proceeding against Judge Watrous had its origin in local prejudice and the malice of disappointed suitors.

Mr. Davis, of Maryland, opposed the impeachment.

Adjourned.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, Thursday, Dec. 6.

The action of the Senate Democratic Caucus to-day, in ousting Mr. Douglas from the position which he has so long occupied at the head of the Territorial Committee, has aroused the most intense excitement among that gentleman's personal and political friends. "Where the gods would destroy, they first make mad," is the time-worn exclamation reiterated on all sides to-night. To keep the Senator from Illinois constantly before the people would seem to be the special mission of the President, who so cordially hates him, and the select circle of politicians whose highest ambition is bounded by the Executive nod. Douglas dared to face the President, and join the Republicans in the nomination of the Kansas inquiry,—and so Mr. Douglas must be degraded. He had the temerity to consult his own views in regard to an important political act,—to vindicate his oath of office rather than obey the dictum of the White House,—and so he is said to maintain the first position in the Territorial Committee. There was significance in the suggestion made to the caucus to-day by Mr. Brown, of Mississippi, who reminded his fellow Democrats that the rejection of Martin Van Buren, when a candidate for a foreign appointment, made him President of the United States. If there is anything within the compass of human power which can [illegible] belong to the lips of the Executive and his two lieutenants, Slidell and Benjamin, the latter say they will [illegible] by fear, it is just such a system of [illegible] persecution of Douglas as is then being pursued. As at least feel the friends of the latter, who rejoice slightly at this latest and lowest exhibition of partisan malignity.

The apology of some of the personal enemies who voted in favor of degrading Mr. Douglas is that he would be absent until after the 1st of January, and that the important business of the Territorial Committee was all to be done prior to that date. A more shallow defence could scarcely be invented. When was any such course ever pursued before, because of the temporary absence of a Senator? Never. In the absence of the nominal Chairman of a Committee, the next on the list takes his place until his return,—and it is idle to suppose that Douglas's [illegible] could become in the least embarrassing, in the present case, to the Democracy who have a majority in the body. The demand of the President for the head of the Senator from Illinois, is the new pattern of the guillotine in motion. The general jealousy of his abrade (and especially of Messrs. Slidell and Benjamin) furnished it abundant motive, and the Douglas doctrine claiming the right of Territorial Legislatures to prohibit Slavery was skillfully used to lash into support of the measure such Southern men as doubted its policy. To the credit of the liberal and able Senator from South Carolina, Mr. Hammond, be it said, that he took no part in this ill-advised proceeding.

You will remember that during last session, Mr. Douglas, in framing the bill to establish the Territorial Government of Arizona, incorporated a provision that whenever the people of that or any other Territory should frame a Constitution with a view to admission into the Union, such Constitution should be submitted to the people for approval or rejection. It was only by a little finesse that Mr. Douglas succeeded in reporting the bill from the Committee in this shape, and his action in that case has very much embittered the feelings against him entertained by many Southern men in Congress.

I understand that at a dinner party in Philadelphia a few days ago, where quite a number of the leading Democratic politicians of Pennsylvania were present, a toast to the health of the President of the United States, although combined with a similar compliment to the Governor of Pennsylvania, was discountenanced upon the distinct ground that Mr. Buchanan had so notoriously indorsed fraud and perjury, and made the consummation and success of those outrages part of Democratic faith! The fact is worthy of notice, as an illustration of the depth of bitterness indulged in by men who for many years were the President's closest and most serviceable friends.

The contested election case over the seat of Hon. J. Mckaig Harris, of Baltimore, is expected to be taken up for decision by the House on Monday next. Mr. Harris' seat is contested solely upon the ground that large numbers of those who were [illegible] voted against him were deterred by fear of violence from going to the polls at all. His majority is very large, however, and there is no evidence working to show that half as many opponents were kept from voting, as the number of his majority. It is probable that the Douglas Democrats will vote to unseat Mr. Harris. Mr. Harris says he shall contain his case by the argument made by the President in his message to Congress last year, wherein it was claimed that [illegible] Congress [illegible]

The Cotton Market, Liverpool, Dec. 10—A. M.—Saturday, Nov. 28, arrived at this port yesterday afternoon. Our market accounts are slightly better for Wheat and Flour. The Cotton Table continues firm at Manchester, while the raw material at Liverpool is pretty freely pressed on sale, and buyers obtain an occasional advantage of an eighth or a sixteenth of a penny in price. Goods and Yarns have further advanced on the advices from India and China, and the large export movement from Great Britain, which, for the ten months of the present year, according to the Board of Trade return, is beyond precedent. The export value of Cotton, fabrics since January is $57,980,000 against $22,800,000 in 1856, and about the same figure last year. In London the Discount Market is again lower, 2@2¼ ⅌ cent. The Funds are dull, closing at 96@96¼ ⅌ cent. Of American Securities, Messrs. BARING write:

"American Stocks. With a quiet market, prices are well maintained, especially for State Bonds. United States 6s, Bonds of 1868, 106¾; 5s, new Loan, 99; Massachusetts Sterling, 102@103; Maryland Sterling, 96¾, buyers; Virginia 5s and 6s, 66@68; Boston City 4½ ⅌ cents, 92½@93; Pennsylvania State 5s in some demand; Inscriptions, 62¾@63; Bonds, 86@87; Pennsylvania Central Railroad 6s, 92; New-York Central Railroad 7s, 94@96; 6s, 81@83; Panama Sterling 7s, 95; Canada 6s, 116; Nova Scotia and New-Brunswick 6s, 112@114; Quebec City 6s, 101@102, ex. div."

Messrs. D. BEAL, SON & Co. report as follows:

"The market for American Securities during the past week has been less active. In State Stocks the transactions have not been to an extent to influence prices, which remain without change. During the last few days one of those brief but brisk speculations which periodically occur in Illinois Central Shares has in some degree relieved the general dullness of the market for railroad securities. The prices of the shares, which had receded to 29, may now be quoted 28 to 28 discount."

LONDON, Friday Evening.

Consols have again been dull throughout the day, and business of all kinds is still entirely without life. There was a little tendency to a stronger feeling at the opening of the market, but it immediately disappeared, and the subsequent transactions were unimportant. The first price was 96¾@96⅞, from which they went directly to 96@96¼, remaining without fresh alteration to the close.

In the discount market 2¾ may be considered the minimum, but, rather than refuse business, some of the brokers will take bills at 2 ⅌ cent.

In the Foreign exchanges this afternoon there was no variation from the rates of last post day.

Foreign stocks were quiet, but well supported, the only important exception being Turkish Scrip, which has fallen to ¼@½ ⅌ cent discount the first issue, and ¼@¾ ⅌ cent premium the second. The new Chilian loan is quoted 3¾@¾ ⅌ cent premium.

Railway shares were heavy in the morning, but almost immediately became better, and left off at a general advance. The more speculative descriptions, such as London and North-Western, Midland, Great Western, &c., were in the highest favor.

There was no change this morning in the corn market.

No bullion operations took place at the Bank to-day.

The rate of insurance on the Indian Empire is still 40 ⅌ cent. The agent of Lloyd's at Halifax reports her having sailed on the 31st October. The telegraph published this morning does not appear to have emanated from the Company.

The premium offered on the new Chilian Loan, announced yesterday by the BARINGS, is only ¼ to ⅜ ⅌ cent.

[By Electric Telegraph.]

Consols closed, after official hours, at 96@96¾. Indian shares weaker. New Chilian, ¼@¾ premium.

PARIS, Friday Evening.

Four and a Half ⅌ Cents closed at 96f. 65c.; Three ⅌ Cents, 71f. 25c.

VIENNA, Friday.

Exchange on London, 10 fl. Gold, 1¼.

The dealings on the Stock Exchange for the past week opened with some heavy sales on Monday forenoon, on the Share and State Bond lists at rather lower figures than the closing bids of the preceding Saturday, in anticipation of something supposed to be in the President's Message of a threatening nature to the international peace. But as this document was made public at 2 o'clock without the sensation matter which was looked for in some quarters, the market immediately recovered the decline, and for the remainder of the week showed a pretty strong resistance to all the efforts made to establish lower figures. Assuming that New-York Central and Reading among the speculative Shares, and Missouri sixes among the active State Bonds, are the leading Stocks of the week, it will be noticed that prices rather gained than lost strength in the end, and that with the exception of Michigan Southern Guaranteed, in which there is some disappointment among holders at the non-action of the Board of Directors on the question of dividing profits the Western list was steady. The usual fluctuation in Pacific Mail Shares was experienced, the extreme differences being as much as 4¼ ⅌ cent., while the final decline from Saturday week is only 1¼ ⅌ cent. The Annual Report and Election of the New-York Central Company on Wednesday were favorably interpreted by the public outside the Street, and although opinions differed, according to the interest at stake for or against the stock, among the speculators on the Exchange, the result has been a withdrawal of 3,000 or 4,000 shares of the floating certificates, by actual purchasers, so that at the close the price was steady at or a fraction above 84 ⅌ cent., and the supply of Stock held or hypothecated among the Brokers quite reduced. The same remark applies, in some measure, to Missouri sixes, which have become less abundant. The other State Stocks are scarce, and altogether the sound material for hypothecation with the Money lenders has become so limited as to reduce the business of demand loans among the Stock Brokers, while the Bill Brokers are having rather more to do. On Friday, Messrs. RIGGS & Co., of Washington, with other parties here, bought up $1,000,000 Treasury Bills, which the Secretary proposed to reissue at 4¼ ⅌ cent. ⅌ annum. Most of them will probably be replaced in Bank. The Gold in exchange was deposited in the Sub-Treasury on Saturday to the extent of $710,000. There have been some operations in the New Federal Stock at 104¼ ⅌ cent. The issue of the second ten millions is not yet announced, and the probability is that the Treasury Bills re-negotiated will carry the Department, with its current receipts, over January, if not to 4th March. The following is the general

The market closed on Saturday at steady prices, after a renewed effort from the short sellers to create a political impression against it—the Canadian Americans news by the Washington telegraph to the contrary notwithstanding. The Stock Exchange Sales for the week are given in the following table:
